Réseaux de surveillance

Early warning and response system

The Network for the Surveillance and Control of Communicable Diseases has been established by the European Parliament and Council Directive 2002/46/EC. The aim of the Network is to promote coordination and cooperation between the Member States, with the assistance of the European Commission, with a view to improving the prevention and control of communicable diseases. The Network involves an Early Warning and Response System (EWRS), which is formed by bringing into permanent communication with one another, through agreed means, the Commission and the competent public health authorities in each Member State responsible for observing the risks which may be related to public health. The restricted section of this application is devoted for the operation of the EWRS. The open section contains links to sites containing health information and news which may be of interest to the public.

Access to this section is limited to the members of the EWRS, i.e. the competent Public Health Authorities of the EU Member States, which have been designated officially by the government of their Country as members of the EWRS, and the competent service of the European Commission.
